Harding

In 1923, President Warren G. Harding and his wife, Florence, visited Oregon's Blue Mountain Country to dedicate a portion of the Old Oregon Trail. At the ceremony, Chief Cap Sumkins of the Cayuse Tribe and Chief Poker Jim of the Umatilla Tribe presented Mrs. Harding with a newly designed blanket based on the Chief Joseph Blanket by Pendleton. In soft colors, the new design represented the First Lady's sincerity and forthright nature - qualities greatly respected by Native Americans. Named the Harding Robe in 1926, it remains one of the most sought-after Native American inspired patterns manufactured by Pendleton Woolen Mills today.

Mountain Majesty

This Mountain Majesty design was inspired by Navajo hand weaving created in the Southwest circa 1920-1940. Pendleton has woven into the pattern a host of positive, Native American-inspired symbols. Terraced steps reference the mountains we climb in life's journey to reach the clouds and sky above. Big mountains are symbols of abundance. Motifs in the central stripe may be interpreted as saddlebags for a journey up and over the mountains. Diamonds may signify the four mountains sacred to the Navajo. Centered on these traditional diamond geometrics are butterfly-like images, uplifting symbols of hope and life. Some believe that butterflies can deliver a wish up to the Great Spirits. Inspirational symbols are complemented by quiet colors that evoke the evening light of a Western landscape and the faded hues of vintage Old Glory.

Papago Park

Arizona Papago Park was once the home of the Maricopa, Pima and Papago tribes. Pima and Papago weavers have produced some of the most beautiful coiled basketry in the Southwest. Using willow, cattail and beargrass, weavers constructed baskets with black designs worked with a crawling desert vine called Devil's Claw. Baskets were woven to carry food, water and possessions, and used as furniture, as shields and helmets, and to serve wine at the yearly saguaro wine festival. The Pima and Papago tribes are now known as the Akimel and Tohono O'odham. Their weavers produce modern baskets of beauty, elegance and strength.

StarWatchers

Since ancient times, Native Americans have practiced astronomy to predict the arrival of the brightest stars. Mysterious medicine wheels in Wyoming and Canada track the rising of Aldebaran, Rigel and Sirius, inspiring this dynamic design. The Pawnee people of the Central Plains honored the Pleiades Cluster, and believe the Pole Star was a protective chief who shone highest in the night sky. Pawnee lodges and villages were planned with astronomy in mind, dedicating one corner of each village to the Evening Star.

White Sands

Shifting dunes of shining white crystal rise from the Tularosa Basin at New Mexico's White Sands National Monument. Erosion from the surrounding mountains constantly replenishes the world's largest gypsum dune field, encompassing 275 square miles. During the day the dunes shine white against the blue sky. At sunset, the sands glow with the vibrant hues of twilight, while desert flora—yucca, cholla and rice grass—reach toward the last rays of the setting sun. This design is our homage to this striking and wild landscape.

Tucson

The Tucson area was originally home to the Akimel O'otham or Pima Tribe. A Pima legend says in the beginning there was darkness, from which the creator emerged. He pulled a magic stick from his heart and formed a ball with it's resin that grew into the Earth as he sang, "I make the world, and see, the world is finished...let it go, start it forth!" In this pattern, the magical creation stick helps bring the Earth, Stars, Moon and Sun from darkness.

Celebrating America's Treasures

Pendleton and the national parks have been inseparable for over a century. From the original Glacier Park blanket to our expanded line today, we salute the National Park Service and the wild beauty of America's treasures. Through licensed National Park Collection products we are proud to support two park restoration projects through a donation to the National Park Foundation, the official charity of America's national parks.

Plains Star

Great Plains Native Americans used an eight-pointed geometric star on hide paintings, tipis, beaded moccasins and clothing, with each point corresponding to one of the planets that shine as the Morning Star. Using muted color that echo the original painted hides, the Morning Star rises, promising a new day.
